| Description of Change                                             | The product currently maintains CB certification for worldwide approvals, N-mark for European approvals, and UL certification for North American approvals. As part of a compliance streamlining initiative, the NEMKO (N) safety mark will be removed. CE marking, supported by the existing CB Test Report, is sufficient to demonstrate conformity with EU regulatory requirements; therefore, the separate NEMKO mark is no longer required.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                  |                           |                                 |                                                                  |                                             |
| Reason for Change                                                 | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• At a global level, EOS has reviewed to streamline safety approval requirements across all EOS products.</li> <li>• As part of this initiative, EOS/Bel is proposing the removal of the NEMKO (N) mark from applicable products.</li> <li>• Since the introduction of the CE mark by the European Union, CE marking has been the minimum and sufficient requirement for entry into the EU market. Initially, there was a perception that having an additional European certification mark (such as the N mark) would ease market access. However, this practice has largely become obsolete.</li> <li>• Under the CE Low Voltage Directive (LVD), manufacturers are required to maintain a safety technical file to support the CE Declaration of Conformity. In practice, most manufacturers—including Bel / EOS—use a CB Test Report as this technical basis. As the CB report itself is issued by a recognized certification body, the regulatory value of the European mark and the CE mark is effectively equivalent.</li> <li>• Nemko approval is not mandatory for the relevant markets or customers.</li> <li>• Current CB certifications already meet compliance needs.</li> </ul> |                                                  |                           |                                 |                                                                  |                                             |
